

Kharak Singh Haveli

حویلی کھڑک سنگھ

1. Basic Facts

- Built by: Not individually documented
- Built in: During or after the reign of Kharak Singh (Sikh period)
- Cost: Not documented
- Built for: A residential structure within Jahangir's Quadrangle

2. Construction Details

- Location: Within Jahangir's Quadrangle
- Materials/technique: Not documented in available sources

3. Historical Background

- Kharak Singh, Ranjit Singh's eldest son and immediate successor, had a short and politically turbulent reign (1839-1840) amid the succession crisis that followed his father's death - this haveli is one of the few structures in the fort directly associated with his name.

4. Interesting Facts / Trivia

- Its addition into the older Mughal-era Jahangir's Quadrangle is another example of the Sikh court building new residential space directly into an existing Mughal complex rather than starting fresh elsewhere.

5. Scenario / Narrative Moment

Tucked inside a quadrangle Jahangir had built two centuries earlier, this Sikh-era haveli is a quiet reminder of how briefly, and how precariously, power changed hands in Lahore during the 1840s - Kharak Singh's own reign lasted barely a year.
