

Naag Temple and Loh Temple

ناگ مندر و لوه مندر

1. Basic Facts

- Built by: Naag Temple commissioned by Chand Kaur, daughter-in-law of Maharaja Ranjit Singh
- Built in: Sikh period
- Cost: Not documented
- Built for: Religious worship during the Sikh period

2. Construction Details

- Architecture: The Naag Temple has a watermelon-shaped dome and fresco-painted interior walls
- Materials/technique: Not separately documented beyond the dome form and interior frescoes

3. Historical Background

- The Naag Temple is currently closed to the public specifically to prevent further deterioration - meaning it is one of the few structures in the fort visitors typically cannot see in person today.

4. Interesting Facts / Trivia

- Its closure makes it one of the fort's few genuinely inaccessible Sikh-era religious structures - most of the fort's major buildings are open to visitors, but this one is deliberately protected from foot traffic.

5. Scenario / Narrative Moment

A watermelon-domed temple, its interior walls once painted with religious frescoes, now sits quietly behind closed doors - not lost, not destroyed, simply protected, waiting for a conservation plan careful enough to let people back in without wearing it away.
